Syn. Pfaffe, Pfarrer, Priester, Prediger, Geistlicher. Pfarrer is one who officiates in any religious rite, who performs the sacrifices and belongs to the most sacred and revered class. In the catholic portion of the Christian church this denomination has been retained, the mass being considered as a sacrifice. The Protestant church, on the other hand, has no longer any Priest, but only Prediger (religious teachers, preachers). Pfarrer, Pfarrer, in Catholic church, is a Priest, and among the protestants a Prediger, who has the right to administer his office in a parish (Pfarr) and to enjoy the income attached to it. Pfaffe is a low and contemptuous expression for Priest, vid. Pfaffenfäule. Geistliche are all those who belong to that class who devote themselves to the performance of religious duties in contradistinction to the laity.

Syn. Pflicht, Obliegenheit, Schuldigkeit. Pflicht indicates every kind of moral necessity, whatever its object may be. A Pflicht becomes, however, a Schuldigkeit towards the person we are bound to perform it, and thus an Obliegenheit, when that which we are bound to do has been undertaken by ourselves or imposed on us by another. There are Pflichten which no one can require from us, for we have not only Pflichten towards ourselves, but also towards God (which are left to our conscience) and even towards animals. Schuldigkeit and Obliegenheit can be required from us by those to whom we are indebted. There are, however, onerous Pflichten also, and these only can be called Obliegenheiten.

Syn. Platt, Flach, Niedrig. The Platt has no perceptible elevation, the Flach no perceptible depression. The flache hand or palm stands in opposition to the closed hand or fist, and the ſtreiche of a body is its extension in length and breadth without thickness. We call a witless man flach, when it does not go far into things, platt, when it is poor, common or vulgar. For we conceive the beautiful, the exquisite, &c., as something raised above what is common. In pointing, however, platt and flach are used synonymously; they are often confounded also in common conversation. Platt and niedrig, differ, in so much as platt betrays a visible want of wit and sense, niedrig a want of nobleness of sentiments. Platt flattery is un-equipped and insipid; niedrig flattery discovers mean sentiments.

Plump & Plumps, s. m. & int. plump! plumb! bounce.

Plump, I. adj. blunt, coarse; heavy, awkward, unwieldy; II. adv. bluntly, coarsely, awkwardly.

Syn. I. Plump, Schwerfällig, Unbehüßlich. Unbehüßlich indicates awkwardness in motion, plump and Schwerfällig its causes; the former implying the remote, the latter the proximate and immediate cause. The Plump has too great a mass and too rude a form. The galleons of the famous invincible fleet were plump engines and on that account extremely Schwerfällig, so that they were too un-behüßlich to escape the skilful manœuvring of the English ships.

Syn. II. Plump, Schwerfällig, Unbehüßlich. The Schwerfällig displeases by his clumsy motions arising from awkwardness; the Unbehüßlich displeases in his language, actions and manners from want of perception of what is becoming; but neither can be said to offend. The Plump and Schwer, however, fall in the respect which is due to others; the first merely from want of delicacy of feeling, the latter also from pride and contempt. The Plump, Schwer and Unbehüßlich violate the respect due to others; the Unbehüßlich merely omits what good breeding requires; the Schwer is really offensive both in language and actions.

Syn. Putzen, Schmuck, Sierde, Sieratz, Verzierung, Putzen, Schmücken, Sieren. Putzen implies properly a lower degree of beautifying; Schmücken and Sieren, a higher. Peasants putzen their rooms, when they sweep and dust them. Schmuck embellishes a thing by splendour and costliness; Sieratz by intrinsic beauty. Putzen, in general, therefore, means to embellish; Schmücken, to embellish by splendour and costliness or on solemn festivals; Sieren, to embellish by the addition of something of its own beautiful, but the beauty of which consists more in the exquisiteness of the form than in splendour or costliness. Sierde, Sieratz, Verzierung, imply that with which anything is gezieret or embellished; with this difference, however, that Sierde is applied also figuratively (e. g. modesty is the greatest Sierde of youth) and the other two not; whilst Sierfarben are mere trifles with which we seek to embellish anything. It is not every Sieratz in a building which is also a Verzierung.

Rechtfertigen, *v. a. vid. under compos. of Recht, *s.

Rechtfertigung, *f. vid. under compos. of Recht, *s.

Syn. Rechtfertigung, Entschuldigung, Schuldverweigerung, Rechtfertigung, Rechtfertigung, Rechtfertigung. When we try to prove that we have not done something bad of which we are accused, or that what we have done is not bad, we undertake our Rechtfertigung. When, however, we grant that we have done it, and that it is wrong, we can only add these reasons to diminish our culpability, and these serve as our Entschuldigung. A Schuldverweigerung can do both. Maternal tenderness excuses a mother's indulgence for the rudeness of her children, but does not rechtfertigen it. When a Schuldverweigerung contains merely an Entschuldigung, it is still distinguished from the latter by its presupposing an accusation, which Entschuldigung does not. A Rechtfertigung may either take place with arms, where one is forcibly attacked, or it may be only verbal against reproaches or accusations. A Schuldverweigerung is a written Schuldverweigerung. Rechtfertigung differs from Rechtfertigung as relating only to an accusation of unjust actions, and secondly, that we can Rechtfertigen only our own actions, but we can rechtfertigen those of another. Rechtfertigung is distinguished from Schuldverweigerung in this, that by the latter we also rechtfertigen another against an accusation, but by a Rechtfertigung only ourselves.

Syn. Reden, Sprechen, Sagen. Sprechen is merely to utter the sounds which the words in any language require; reden, to express by words its sense; sagen relates to what is uttered, whether it be the mere sounds or the subject of discourse. Parrots and some other birds may be said to sprechen; but it would be absurd to say that a parrot had gesehen a long time. Sagen is more immediately related with to tell, to explain; az, tell me (sagen Sie mir) where he lives (not reden Sie, or sprechen Sie mir). It is, however, the same thing whether we say sagen, reden, or sprechen Sie mir nicht davon, do not speak to me about it.

Syn. Ruhe, Raß, Friede. Ruhe, in general, is that state in which we do not move; Raß, that in which a fatiguing motion ceases. Hence Raß is said only of living beings, for these only feel the fatigue of motion and the want of repose. Ruhe, on the contrary, is used of bodies whether inanimate or living. Raß, moreover, only succeeds to motion in order to continue it. Ruhe can precede all motion and continue for ever. We refer only after bodily motion; but there is also an internal Ruhe: — that of the soul and mind

That state, in which the mind is not agitated, by any emotion is called Ruhe; S-tie, when not agitated by unpleasant emotions.

Syn. Schande, Schimpf, Schmach, In-jurie, Entehrung. Whatever diminishes the worthiness of any one in the eyes of others, is for him a Schande; that which is a mark of dishonour for him, is a Schimpf; when this consists in such a treatment as implies the want of every honourable feeling, it becomes a Schmach. Schimpf and Injurie are distinguished from each other in this, that the former indicates any treatment by which a man suffers in his character, whether his honour had before been forfeited or not; Injurie, when his honour is intact. Entehrung arises either from the judicial sentence of the forfeiture of any one's honour or from the conversion of the favourable opinion of his moral worth into an injurious one.

Syn. I. Schmerz, Weh, Pein. —der Schmerz (pain) is antithetical to Vergnügen (pleasure), no in a like manner is Weh (ill or evil) the reverse of Wohl (good, welfare, &c.). Pein (agony or torture) is only a higher degree of Schmerz.

Syn. II. Schmerz, Traurigkeit, Betrübniß, Leid. —der Schmerz as long as a disagreeable sensation is still novel, recent or acute, it is Schmerz (pain or suffering); as soon, however, as the first Schmerz has lost a portion of its violence, it leaves behind it a Traurigkeit (sadness, &c.) and Betrübniß (affliction, &c.) which are of a milder nature. —Schmerz is, therefore, the condition of a more exquisite sensibility or sensation, than Traurigkeit and Betrübniß. Der Traurige as well as der Betrübte complains, but der Schmerz is passively felt. Leid is character, vexation or annoyance, and is that sorrow or grief felt under some misfortune occasioned by our fellow-creatures, more especially so, should it be occasioned with injustice.

Syn. Schreien, Rufen. He, who rufet (calls), does so for the sake of being heard; but one schreit (cries out) also, without having always such an object in view. This distinction gives rise to others, and thence Rufen is effected either by words or articulate and definite sounds, but Schreien can also consist of mere inarticulate sounds; moreover Schreien requires a powerful exertion of the voice.

Syn. I. Schuld, Ursache. Schuld can only be employed for "cause," when the effect and motive are bad, but Ursache (cause) may be used indifferently, whether the effect and motive be good or bad.

Syn. II. Schuldlos, Unschuldig. Schuld may be considered in two points of view. It is guilt or a fault, when it conveys the impression of a neglect of moral duty, together with its imputation and harm; when it implies an injury committed or a wrong sustained. This last idea prevails in unschuldig (guiltless), the first in schuldlos (guiltless, faultless); children are said to be unschuldig (innocent), because they are incapable of doing anything wicked; when certain pleasures, games, sports, &c. are said to be unschuldig (innocent, innocuous), all that is meant to be conveyed is, that they are not detrimental; those are schuldlos (guiltless, innocent), which are not exposed to any moral law.

Syn. Schwere, Gewicht, Bucht. Schwere, Bucht. Schwere and Bucht are rendered manifest not only by motion, but also by pressure on the body, that opposes the central or centrifugal force. Bucht is properly speaking evident alone by force or momentum. Bodies differing from each other as to Schwere (weight or specific gravity) fall with equal velocity in a vacuum, and therefore are of the same absolute Schwere (absolute gravity). Hence it appears that Schwere is heaviness or gravity, Bucht weight, and Bucht ponderousness, ponderance. In a figurative sense, that which is schwer (heavy), requires much force or power, and that which is müthig (weighty) produces great effects, is effective. It is in Schwere Frage (a difficult, grave question), what constitution or form of government may be the best, but it is müthig (important, momentous) that the government be carried on as is ought to be.

Syn. Sehen, Ansehen, Gaffen, Angaffen, Gucken, Schielen, Blinzen. The act of directing the eyes to any object is expressed by ansehen (to look at); the ocular perception of that object by sehen (to see). He who wants to sehen (see) any thing properly, must ansehen (look at) it, and he who anseht any thing within the scope of his vision, supposing his sight to be perfect, will also sehen (see) it. Ansehen without attention is gaffen or angaffen, i. e. to gaze or stare stupidly, to gape at. The Gaffer (gazer, starrer, gazer) has his eyes wide open without seeing distinctly, or without being exactly conscious of what he really is seeing. Ansehen differs from gaffen in implying a deliberate object, whilst the latter is to gape at any thing. Gucken expresses a part of the meaning of sehen, viz. that a part denoting the direction of the eyes to the object, but implies besides the inquisitive approximation of the head towards the same. It is hence "to peep, peer, look inquisitively." Schielen is to squint and blinzen is to blink accompanied with winking, i. e. "to blink and wink."

Selten, I. adj. rare, scarce; unfrequent. seldom; extraordinary; II. adv.
seldom, rarely, scarcely, infrequently.

Syn. Selten, Seltfam. Selten is an attribute of any thing that is seldom found or possessed; it implies something which always has a certain value derived from the very fact of its being uncommon, and very often it produces admiration, pride or delight; it is, therefore, equivalent to "rare, scarce"; on the other hand seltfam is an epithet, that conveys
the idea of something not only uncommon, but likewise unusual, that differs from what our mind conceives to be true to the laws of nature, of sound reason, of universal custom, thereby exciting always surprise, very often ridicule, and perhaps contempt; hence it is aptly explained by strange, odd or by the familiar word queer; both words may sometimes be explained by singular or curious; if it makes us laugh or sneer, seltfam often answers to funny, droll.

Seltenheit, f. (i. pl. —n) rareness,
rarity, scarcity; — en, rarities, curiosities.

Seltfam, I. adj. 1. strange, odd, irregular, wonderful; 2 + rare; II. adv.
strangely, oddly; es sieht — aus, it affords a strange sight, it looks odd.

Syn. Seltfam, Unglaublich, Wunder- lich, Wunderbar, Wunderbar. All these words, with the exception of Unglau-
big, have reference to the object or subject itself; unglaublich (incredible) expresses an opinion or judgment upon the possibility or reality of the said object, &c. Wunderlich (queer) refers merely to every action proceeding from our will or fancy, to every idea, &c. that is repugnant to stern reason or sober judgment; it is, therefore, either singular, eccentric or whimsical. A capricious or fanciful man is wunderlich (singular, odd, whimsical), his actions are wunderlich (surprising, extraordinary), his ideas are wunderlich (eccentric, strange, fantastic). Wunderbar is wondrous, and wunderbar is wonderful. Selt- fam is that which from being unusual or eccentric appears generally to be wrong or improper, it is, therefore, strange, odd, queer,
singular, curious. Vid. also Selten.

Syn. Seüffen, Seühen, Seüßern. Seüffen (sighing) is produced as well by a deep and long-drawn inspiration as by a strong expiration. Seühen and Seüßen are the strong expulsion of the breath attended with a painful sound. Seüßen is, moreover, the moral subdued expression of a mental suffering. Seühen shows the immediate presence of a pang or throw, and Seüßen reveals the exhausting exertion of enduring suffering. The strict censor freiset (sighs) over the corruption of the times. A patient ädgt (groans, utters a groan) when racked by a pain. A man ready to sink under a burden, one mortally wounded, stöhnt. It seems, therefore, that ädgen is to groan acutely, and stöhnen to utter low, moaning or deep groans, to groan heavily or gaspingly.

Sondern, conj. I. but; ich habe es nicht nur gesehen, — auch gehört, I have not only seen it, but heard it too; nicht hier, — dort, not here, but the other; 2. + except, but.

Syn. Sondern, Aber. Sondern separates the consecutive clause from the antecedent clause of a period, when the former entirely negatives the latter. Aber, when the former only partially expresses the reverse of the latter. There is hence a great difference between these two phrases: ich leugne es nicht, sondern ich zweifle nur daran; and: ich leugne es nicht, aber ich zweifle doch daran. I do not positively deny it, (on the contrary) I merely doubt it; I don't deny it, I doubt it however

Syn. Spalten, Trennen. In the first place, one spaltet (cleaves, splits, rends asunder) only solid and tough or stiff bodies; one trennt (separates or parts) fluids, and amongst the solids also such as are pliant. The seas on one globe are getrennt (separated) by the mainland, but not apspaltet; a great and continued heat on the other hand often spaltet (cracks or chaps) the ground. Then again, one spaltet (splits) that which was intimately connected and bound together; one trennt (separates) that, which, without being intimately connected, was considered as one whole, the parts of which, after the separation, begin to exist as independent wholes.

Spältung, f. (pl. -en) fig. disunion, division, rupture; schism.

Syn. Spaltung, Trennung, Bermürfnis. Disagreements among the members of a society are only mere Spaltungen, (splits, divisions, differences, disunion, schism), so long as these members do not secede and set up a separate society of their own; the moment this takes place, a complete Trennung (separation) follows. Even among the very early Christians there were several Spaltungen (differences), but those Spaltungen were no Trennungen, since they still formed one congregation, or a church as before, and did not give rise to a sect. When the Spaltung (breach of concord or unanimity) is accompanied with ill-will and hostile demonstrations, so as to lead to a breach of the previous good order, it is then a Bermürfnis (an open rupture).

Syn. Spieß, Speer, Lanze. The two first words (= Spies) were originally the same, differ, however, now in this, that Spies is the superior word; one says the Spies (pike, halberd) of a night-watchman, of an Uken, the Spier (speer) of a knight. The Lanze (Lat. lancea) is so called, either because it is long (luna), or from the French lancer (to throw, dart), so that Lanze (lance) was in its primitive meaning tantamount to Wurfspeer (javelin, dart).

Syn. Spöten (über einen), Aufziehen (etnen), Aufhalten (sich über einen), Zadeln (einen). Spöten und sich aufhalten differ in the first place from Aufziehen in this, that one only quizzes (quizes, banter, rallies) persons, but one spottet (mocks, derides) and sich aufhalt (consurses) also über things, actions and opinions;
moreover, that when it concerns individuals, a man may spöten über (ridicule) them and (sich aufhalten) animadvert upon others even in thought, but one can only aufhalten (banter) them, when they are present. Spöten und Auf-ziehen differ again from sich aufhalten in this,
that the two former consider the object as ridiculous, while the latter seriously expresses blame or censure.

Etämmeiser, m. vid. Etämmeiser.

Etämmeiser, v. a. & n. (aur. haben) to stammer, stutter, hammer in speak-ing, to lisp; fig. to falter; pronunciation, express in a faltering voice.

Syn. Stammeln, Stottern, Stallen Stottern implies an interruption or break, and then a repetition of words or syllables accompanied by a painful feeling of exertion on the part of the person so speaking. It arises either from a natural defect or from an unfortunate habit. It is, therefore, identical with our "to stutter." Stammeln and hellen merely imply an imperfect utterance without the accompanying defects of stottern. The children hellen or stammeln, when their tongue, as yet imperfectly trained, utters words only partially or incorrectly; stammeln is, therefore, almost the same as our "to stammer." Stuten is the stronger word of the two, expressing the higher degree. Hence it is sometimes equivalent to our "to matter;" in choice or poetical language it may be rendered by "to lap."

Syn. I. Stoß, Stab, Steden. The two former correspond to the English "stick, staff," vid. Hirtenslab, Zauberstab, Wanderstab, Bettelstab u. s. w. Hence Stab is the more elegant word of the two and in poetry is often rendered by "wand." Steden is a small or thin Stoß, and is also a lower expression, Stoß being the usual term for a walking-stick; Steden is therefore the English "rod or switch."

Syn. II. Staud., Staudb., Strauch., Strauß.
 The Staudb., the Strauch. and the Strauß are stems from one common root; the Strauch.

 numerous little stems, that its twisted, that they appear entangled, and the eye is baffled, when attempting to trace them out individually, Strauch. is, therefore, the best and least erroneous name for the more the shrub or low dwarf-tree. Strauß more Strauch. when it consists of numerous little stems, all of them proceeding from one root, growing in a tangle or maze and having a great quantity of small leaves (as the Strauß (bush). A Staud is one single stem, e. g. St.

Syn. Strafe, Buße, Büßung. Buße is the indemnification, reparation, amends which a person who has done wrong or who has committed an injury has to make either by reimbursement or other mode; Buße is therefore atonement; every other suffering which he has to undergo for the crime or wrong committed is the Strafe & i. penalty or punishment; when the party that inflicts the punishment has the intent of producing the reformation of the party punished, in that case the Strafe is a Büßung or chastisement. Some Strafen may be Büßungen at the same time. They are Strafen, as the deserved and proportionate consequences of a crime: they are Büßungen as a means of improvement. The Todesstrafe (capital punishment) can for this reason be no Büßung, for in this life no reformation can be effected by it.

Syn. Stumm, Sprachlos. Stumm (dumb) is that which utters no sound; sprachlos (speechless) merely that which cannot speak (as sometimes man). Therefore all animals should not be said to be naturally stumm, but (speechless). For some, as different birds of song, utter many varied sounds or notes, and they only perform (are or become dumb) under peculiar circumstances. In this sense certain animals alone (e. g. fishes) are completely stumm.

Syn. Tabet, Miſſſtatten, Miſſbilligkei; Miſſſallen (diſlike or diſpleaſure) is the verſe of Gefallen, and conſiſts, in the firſt place, of a mere feeling for which we offer can neither account to ourſelves nor aſſign the reaſon to others; that which we tabet (blame or cenſure) and miſſbilligen (diſapprove), implies faults of which we are clearly conſcious and which we can ſhow or, at all events, think we can. Miſſſallen can be limited to the mere feeling and be kept confined in one's own mind, but when a perſon tabet and miſſbilligt, he lets his opinion be known either with intelligible ſigns or more generally with words. Laſtly, irrational and even inſanate things and their effects may alſo miſſfallen (diſpleaſe) us, but we tabet and miſſbilligen only for actions and their effects.

Syn. Theilen, Eintheilen, Abtheilen, Zertheilen. Theilen is generally to separate a whole into parts. Eintheilen (to dispose, &c.) denotes that one separates the greater whole into smaller parts of a definite regular number, or a thing of higher rank into parts of inferior rank. This may be done by the mind merely; if this separation is also made evident to the senses by outward signs, it then becomes abtheilen (to part off, to divide, &c.). Zertheilen (to part asunder, to disconnect, disperse) is separating the constituent parts of a whole in such a manner, that they exist as independent wholes for themselves.

Tilgen, v. a. 1. to blot out; 2. to eradicate, efface, extinguish; 3. to pay, annul, settle Schuld —, to pay, discharge, sink a debt.
Syn. Tilgen, Vertilgen, Herkären, Ausrotten, Vernichten. Ausrotten corresponds exactly to the English, to root out, extirpate, eradicate, and Vernichten is "to annihilate." We tilgen something that is disagreeable, disadvantageous, &c. to us, e. g. weeds, vermin, debts; and do so by extirpating (a rooten) the first, and figuratively speaking, the second, the last by paying it. The English for this is "to get rid of." Vertilgen always implies violent measures; it is "to exterminate." Hence we may say, Vertilgen weeds, vermin, but not debts. A person forfeit merely those things, which are composed of component parts, by disturbing their state of rest, by stirring them asunder, &c. Time erases everything, but it does not vertilgen. The use of the latter, unless it is applied to God, is always figurative or hyperbolic.

Syn. Umgiegen, Umgeben, Umgiegen. A person is umgeben (surrounded) by many others, even if the circle is not yet completely closed. When the king appears at the court, he is umgeben by the court dignitaries, but not umgogen (encircled), still less umgiegelt; for they only stand behind him and on both sides. Moreover umgeben is said also of a circle, that consists of manmade things. The sun and the moon are sometimes umgeben by a bright circle, which is called a halo. But that which is umgogen is shut in on all sides and into a perfect circle. We therefore umgiegen something, that it may have no egress, and no one an ingress to the same. Umgiegen is to close something in more narrowly, to obstruct the egress and to be able to attack it from a short distance. Umgiegen, therefore, may either have a friendly or a hostile object in view, but umgogen (to environ, encompass) only a hostile one.

Syn. Unbehaglich, Unangenehm. In the first place unbehaglich points out generally the feeling of displeasure at our actual condition unangenehm the feeling of displeasure or disappointment at the failure of a hope or at the absence of some wished for good. It is unangenehm (disagreeable) to us, when a letter does not come, which we have anxiously expected, but it is not unbehaglich. On the other hand, a cold room in the winter is very unbehaglich (uncomfortable). Unbehaglichkeit arises moreover from a vague feeling, which we can at little analyse as its causes, but we are more clearly aware of what is unangenehm, as like wise of its causes.

Syn. Unbeständig, Veränderlich, Wandelumtig, Veränderlich (mutable, changeable) is an epithet for a person or thing that often and easily changes, or for anything in general which can be changed. Faschisch is veränderlich, a man is veränderlich, &c. The proportion between the sides of a triangle is called veränderlich and not unbeständig. The former, therefore, points more to the susceptibility of undergoing change and is not always a fault. Unbeständig implies more a defect of constancy in the state or relation once entered into, and is always a fault, e. g. ein unbeständiger (inconstant) man; unbeständiges (fickle) weather. Wandelumtig (irresolute) can naturally be only used of persons. A man is wandelumtig, when he often changes his thoughts, his choice, his resolves before the execution of them takes place; he is unbeständig and veränderlich, when he often changes his will or plans after having commenced the execution of them. The Wandelumtig cannot direct his choice to any object with firmness. The Unbeständige and Veränderliche does not long remain constant to the choice he has already made; the former cannot make a beginning, the latter cannot persevere.

Syn. Ungehalten, Böse, Berrig, Unwillig. The slightest degree of displeasure felt, entertained at some wrong which another does, is expressed by böse. He who is böse at something, allows it to be observed by his silence by staying or going away, by averting his face, &c. Ungehalten expresses a higher degree. He who is ungehalten at the conduct of another, causes his displeasure to be known by movements of disapproval and restlessness. With a person who is tolerant that displeasure attains the highest degree of intensity occasioning the most violent agitation, &c. Unwille is an effusion of less power, not so conspicuous, often quite concealed. Any injustice, that we suffer ourselves, can put us into Berrig. On the other hand any wrong, even when others suffer it, whether it took place long ago or not, nay, every kind of wrong, as soon as it comes to our knowledge, can excite our Unwillen.

Syn. I. Ungeuüß, Zweifelhaft, Unentſchieden, Berlegen. We are ungeuüß (uncertain), when we do not know, whether something ought to be desired and whether it be good or essentially necessary to desire that something. We are zweifelhaft (doubtful, dubious) when we do not know which of two things we ought to desire, seeing that we have reasons equally cogent and potent for either side. Unentſchieden (resolute) is the difficulty itself of deciding upon something, as long as we are still undecided for want of a preponderance of reasons, and thus becomes Berlegenheit (embarrassment), when we positively must decide upon something, and yet cannot make up our minds to adopt one thing or the other. Knackweicht (uncertainty) makes us indifferent, Zweifelhaftigkeit (doubt) uneasy, Unentſchiedenheit (inactive, Berlegenheit, distressed, anxious and fearful. In its highest degree Berlegenheit becomes a dilemma causing great mental distress.
Syn. II. Ungeuüß, 3. proposition, whether in itself considered it be true or false, is ungeuüß, as long as the mind does not fully comprehend all the reasons, that tend to demonstrate its truth, or as long as there are not yet sufficient reasons for regarding it as false. It is zweifelhaft (doubtful) when the reasons for and against it are equally balanced.

— egelt, m. love of giving one's opinion, passion for judging; — straft, f. — vermögen, n. faculty of judgment (as distinguished from understanding and reason); — schöpfung, f. L. T. the coming to a decision; finding of a verdict; — (s) pruch, m. decree, sentence, judgment; den — stpruch vollziehen, to execute the sentence; — sttag, m. day of judgment; — steller or — verfasser, m. one who draws up or prepares a sentence; — svoll, adj. full of judgment.

Syn. Urtheil, Urtheil, Spruch, Erkenntnis, Rechtsschick. Urtheil is distinguished from Urtheil, Spruch and Rechtsschick by this, that it is an opinion which contains the declared will of such persons who assemble at certain periods to deliberate upon public or national affairs, and form resolutions which obtain a legal power, as soon as they are confirmed by the head of the state. Urtheile, Sprüche and Rechtsschick, on the other hand, concern private affairs, but in such a manner, that the two first are only used for the decision in suits of law. An Urtheil (judgment) is distinguished, however, from Spruch (sentence) or an Urtheil, by being the decision of a law-judge or of a college endowed with judicial authority, whilst on the other hand a Spruch or an Urtheil is also the decision of an arbitrator or the verdict of a jury. An Erkenntnis (decision) is as well the Urtheil of a court of law as the Spruch of a collective body of men versed in jurisprudence. Rechtsschick is an answer, a decree, which superiors give to a representation or inquiry, and by which the party so inquiring or representing must regulate his conduct.

Urtheilen, v. a. & n. (ur. haben) (über etwas) 1. to pass sentence, decide; 2. to judge; to form, give one's opinion.

Syn. Urtheilen, Beurtheilen, Rechtten. 1. urtheile (form a judgment), that some thing is true or false, good or bad. Rechten (to judge, decree), however, is to determine after such a manner, that the Urtheil has a decisive power. Concerning learned works every one can urtheilen (form a judgment) but no one dares rechten (pass sentence). He who beurtheilt (criticizes) something, affirms or denies the perfection or faults of any object.
